What you will learn:

This self-study program aims to provide practitioners with the essential knowledge of Impact-Linked Finance (ILF) to get started. It answers the “why” of ILF, illustrates the benefits of this innovative practice, explains fundamental ILF concepts and design principles, gives short examples of ILF use cases and prepares the ground for our more intensive and deeper cohort-based trainings.

How the course is structured:

If you are familiar with impact finance, but are new to Impact-Linked Finance, this is the place to start. Learn what you need to know at your own pace and benefit from the engaging lessons and formats:

LESSON 1: What ILF is and why it matters

LESSON 2: From ILF design to practice

LESSON 3: When it makes sense to use ILF

COHORT-BASED COURSE • REAL-WORLD IMPACT-LINKED FINANCE

Who should participate:

- Implementers who want to start using ILF
- Innovative finance transaction teams looking to elevate their ILF expertise, e.g. advisory firms, foundations, development organizations
- Impact investors striving to use ILF, e.g. impact fund managers or DFIs

What you should bring:

- The aim to start using ILF in practice
- A successful participation in our self-study course or similar knowledge level
- The commitment to spend 4 – 5 hours per week over a period of 6 weeks and engage in live training modules, group and individual assignments, as well as moderated discussions and AMAs.

When, how and where :

- Application-based cohort of 10 to 20 participants. 1st cohort planned for March 2025
- Participants need to be users of the ILF Community Hub
